10	The master plan should address ways to make the park more permeable for the community. Their is only one real entrance for a 20 acre space, and that entrance is on the back side to downtown Rainier Beach, the light rail, and the Chief Sealth Trail. This access issue is a design failure that the master plan is only exacerbating but further walling off the garden, creating a private space, and expanding the parking.	11/28/2018 7:00 AM

7	It is important to me that this park remains free and open to the public. I would not go if it cost money, and I enjoy it a lot. People need access to green spaces and trees and nature, even in cities, to go and relax.	11/30/2018 3:52 PM

11	Very incredible project. I wish you the very best. For the record, as a resident of Seattle in the surrounding neighborhoods I am supportive of a door fee and promoting further state/city investment into Kubota Garden as an invaluable environmental and cultural asset of Seattle.	11/28/2018 4:44 PM
12	I wish that the available parking along Renton Avenue could be better publicized. Loosing some of the garden to more parking seems a bad bargain.	11/28/2018 3:39 PM
13	It might be nice to restrict photography in some way, so many large groups get in the way of enjoying the park.	11/28/2018 2:58 PM
14	Please do not change the culture of Kubota too much. it's such a beautiful space and while increasing visitorship can be good it can also mean more wear and tear on the grounds, more litter, less tranquility.	11/28/2018 10:39 AM
15	I fear that with "improvements" to the park, you'll wall it in and start charging admission like Seattle Japanese Garden. That would be a shame. The park is fine just the way it is, except it could use a few more parking spaces and actual restrooms.	11/28/2018 9:03 AM
16	The garden needs more entry points to become more accessible to the surrounding community. Not having an entrance on the north and west side add a 1/4 to 3/4 of a mile walk to any neighbor who wants to get inside of the park. This barrier to enjoy this treasure in our backyard robs us of easy daily ability to appreciate the park. In an area with limited developed parks as such, this is an injustice to our neighborhood.	11/28/2018 7:00 AM
17	When my daughter was younger, she is 22 now, we spent a lot of time at Kubota. We loved the secret paths and having picnics next to the ponds.	11/27/2018 10:57 PM
18	I love this park and am looking forward to seeing what the community wants the future of it to look like. Two things based on the questions above: Please, no refreshmentsI don't want to see wrappers or garbage in the park. And please no way finding signs (a map at the top, maybe). One of the great joys of Kubota is that you can wander around and feel like you're in something more wild than you. There's no right or wrong way to wander through the gardens and nothing is more important to see than anything else. In our world it's rare that we can do something, anything, without have it do it the "right" way and I fear that the signs will give the impression that there's a right way to see the park :(11/27/2018 8:43 PM

21	I think part of the Master Plan should consider how much maintenance will be required for any new parts of the garden or whether maintenance might even be lessened. Kubota is a large garden/park and it already lacks some regular maintenance, such as weeding, pruning, etc. I would hope that there might be additional gardeners or maintenance workers added to care to any extra work that the Master Plan creates.
22	I've often heard how wonderful Kubota Gardens is, but then I've also read that there is a high instance of car break-ins there. This has scared me off. I'd like to feel safer and able to visit alone during the day or with my 2 small children. Currently, I don't feel I can.	11/27/2018 2:36 PM
23	This is such a beautiful garden with a rich history. I'm grateful a new Master Plan is being developed.	11/27/2018 2:07 PM

25	This is a real gem of a garden, with a very significant and important historywhich must be included!	11/27/2018 1:17 PM
26	Re: 5 above- the past several times I have been to the Garden, it appeared in need of ongoing maintenance. I picked-up litter in a walk-through in late summer, but weeds had begun to take-over some areas. More staff, more volunteers needed?	11/12/2018 8:52 AM
27	We love the two main ponds and would love to see more. We used to be near the Japanese Garden in the Arboretum and enjoyed the activities. We'd likely visit Kubota more if there were more events.	11/9/2018 3:16 PM
28	I used to be very involved with the Garden and this survey reminds me that i need to contribute more in the future. Thanks for reaching out.	11/9/2018 5:12 AM
29	I think awareness of the natural aspects of the property, including Mapes Creek and the wetlands surrounding the developed garden area, could be improved.	11/9/2018 12:06 AM

Keeping the sense that the garden is a bit mysterious and a local secret - that you cannot find everything the first 10 times. You discover a new path, a new way of traversing the garden 10 years in. // There's something about the way in which the garden has evolved that makes it feel like a gracious but unpretentious residential space that is part of the neighborhood, and this makes it unlike any other park in Seatte of which 1 am familiar. There must be a way to make it "more accessible" without losing the sense of it being developed over a long period of time?? In a way that is true to its history? How do you make it better serve the public without losing this contextual, meandering quality? // Please please please, I beg of you, please keep the sense of surprise and exploration. Everything does not need to be signed and cataloged and straightened and make sense. Getting lost in a safe place like Kubota Gardens is a relief from our micromanaged google mapped urbanism. // It could be okay that you add a "program," but do not allow this to take this place into the banal regularity of what is "expected." Play with the history of the Japanese garden, play with the transition of the Japanese landscape into the Seattle landscape and what that means to our neighborhood, architypes of elegantly pruned evergreens, what is uniquely Seattle and what is not? Most of all, play with creating space. There is a serious design problem of making vistas and the sense of expanding and receding sense of space that has NOTHING to do with wayfinding. The trees, the plants, the colors, the meandering pathways – this is the program. // Yes to strong design. Design that is strong enough to hold some mystery and design that remains true to the neighborhood. It is fine if it is a regional attraction with it sign on I-5, but it is more of a regional attraction if it remains strongly rooted in the space in which it currently exists. // The deep hedge along Renton Avenue is nice - I've always been pleasantly amazed that it is allowed to t	11/7/2018 6:31 PM
