

The watershed is located within a high-severity fire regime, where very large fires occur at long return intervals of one to several hundred years. There have been numerous fire starts in the vicinity of the watershed since 1970, but very few within the watershed itself. As soon as any starts were detected, they were immediately suppressed. Consequently, all of the starts within the watershed have burned less than one acre, with most burning only a very small area.