

GROWING OLD

OUR GUESTS INCLUDE

Running Grass, Three Circles Center
Valarie Seacrest, Native American
Agriculture Fund

Joy Okazaki, Kubota Garden Foundation

Lisa Kenny, Earth Corps

Sandra Pinto de Bader, City of Seattle

Nancy Whitlock, Nature Consortium

Weston Brinkley, Urban Forestry Commission

Kimberly Deriana, Artist

David Zuckerman, UW Botanic Gardens

APRIL 15

Series Launch

MAY 10 (tent)

Concert in Martha
Washington Park

MAY – JULY

Tree Walks

IMAGINE

THE

YEAR

2070

What does it look like?

SIDE 1

50

We would have healthy, abundant
Orca relatives in the Salish Sea.

An urban workforce dedicated to greening the urban space downtown. What if we weren't all looking at our phones?

Architecture that reflects all of the community and not just the white majority.

Forests that are devoid of litter.
Health and wellbeing of the collective.

It's bountiful. I walked around and I pick blackberries, I walked around and I picked some herbs, and I picked some apples and some pears. And no one was responding to me as if I was stealing from them. And I didn't take more than was needed. There's no worry. You don't see the sorrowfulness of hunger.

Less concrete. Less asphalt. More open space. Let's have more mini-green spaces.

Affordable multifamily homes in proximity to beautiful trees and green space.

Softer, more hospitable, more convivial spaces.

Moving away from extractive economies to renewable economies.

I would want to be able to walk through and just see... Wow, that is really happening, that's there. I can see it, I can feel it.

How we did it:

MAY WE PICK
YOUR BRAINS?