

What do you think a Gribble looks like? Draw your idea using the eyes below. To see a real Gribble and learn more about them and the effects to the seawall visit:

www.Seattle.gov/gribbles

Who is eating the seawall that holds up Seattle's waterfront? It's the Gribbles!

Gribbles are tiny animals about the size of a flea. They have seven pairs of legs and four mouths. They nibble wood in salt water, such as boats and docks, until the wood falls apart.

Over the years the gribbles have nibbled away at the wood in the seawall until they have caused so much damage that Seattle needs a new seawall.

What do you think a Gribble looks like? Draw your idea using the eyes below. To see a real Gribble and learn more about them and the effects to the seawall visit:

www.Seattle.gov/gribbles

Who is eating the seawall that holds up Seattle's waterfront? It's the Gribbles!

Gribbles are tiny animals about the size of a flea. They have seven pairs of legs and four mouths. They nibble wood in salt water, such as boats and docks, until the wood falls apart.

Over the years the gribbles have nibbled away at the wood in the seawall until they have caused so much damage that Seattle needs a new seawall.