

Hide and Ride Parking Mitigation

Sound Transit and the City of Seattle are committed to discouraging “hide and ride” parking around Seattle’s Link light rail stations. “Hide and ride” parking occurs when transit users park in neighborhoods surrounding transit stations.

Joint Plan Coordinated with Neighborhoods

Based on community input, Sound Transit and the City revised the approach to “hide and ride” and created a new plan that is more flexible and responsive to community needs.

Sound Transit and the City’s joint “hide and ride” mitigation plan addresses how the two agencies will work with affected communities to identify and implement appropriate parking controls around light rail stations. The plan is outlined below.

Mitigation Measures

Sound Transit will conduct an on-street parking inventory around each station within the year preceding each station opening. This will help determine where “hide and ride” parking might occur in the absence of any additional parking restrictions.

Sound Transit and the City will work with the community around each station to identify appropriate parking management strategies within ¼ mile of the station, a reasonable walking distance for transit riders. Sound Transit will pay for the installation of parking controls, which may include:

- 1 or 2-hour time-limit signs
- Passenger, truck and load / unload zones
- Residential parking zone (RPZ) signage
- Paid parking technology (new pay station technology)

The City will monitor all parking controls during the first two years after the system opens and will work with the communities to make any necessary adjustments.

Sound Transit will implement a public education and marketing campaign related to hide-and-ride parking and access to the light rail stations.
