Seattle Parks and Recreation is excited to work with the community on planning for a new community center in the South Lake Union neighborhood.

Located at the corner of Mercer Street and Dexter Avenue, it will be a private-public partnership, operated by Seattle Parks and Recreation, but located on the ground floor of a private development project.

The new center will be a welcoming and visible space from the street with easy access for pedestrians, cyclists and people traveling by mass transit. Key features of the center include a full-size basketball court, fitness area, and childcare.

These events provide an opportunity for the community to learn more about this project, meet the design team and give us feedback on the design concepts.
