

One Seattle Comprehensive Plan

TRANSPORTATION

No matter where you're going - whether to work or school, visiting friends, running errands, going to your place of worship, or out to dinner - you should be able to do so safely, efficiently, and affordably.

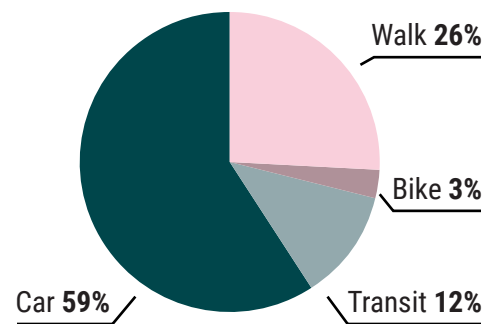

Beyond filling potholes and helping buses and freight deliveries run on time, City staff also pave streets, adjust traffic signals, create enjoyable public spaces, and build a network of bike lanes and sidewalks to serve people of all ages and abilities.

Far too often, when government plans are developed, they exclude too many people, particularly Black, Indigenous, or part of a community of color; people who are LGBTQIA+; people living in poverty; immigrant communities and people who do not speak English at home; young people; older adults; and people with disabilities. As we develop our collective transportation vision, we want to hear everyone's voice and ensure we meet their needs.

Transportation in the Comprehensive Plan Update

The Plan includes a transportation element that contains broad policy guidance for a transportation system that meets the city's mobility needs and advances our climate, safety, and equity goals. We will plan for growth across Seattle by supporting improvements to benefit walking, biking, transit, and freight mobility. The Comprehensive Plan is being updated at the same time the Seattle Transportation Plan, which will provide more details about strategies and actions we will take to fulfill our collective transportation vision.

What We're Working On Now

- Seattle Transportation Plan  – providing everyone with access to safe, efficient, and affordable options.
- Sound Transit Coordination  – environmental analysis and community engagement around new light rail stations and station areas.
- Seattle's current projects and programs  are funded in part by the voter-approved Levy to Move Seattle  and Seattle Transit Measure .

Let's Talk About the Future

What challenges do you face in getting around the city?

What transportation options would help you reduce your drive-alone car trips?

What steps can the City take to provide more equitable transportation options for everyone?

What do you need to feel safe, comfortable, and dignified, whether you walk, roll, bike, take transit, or drive?
