Seattle's Neighborhoods

Seattle is a city of neighborhoods of diverse character and strong identities. City departments and non-City entities define neighborhoods differently based on many factors. Some districts and neighborhoods are informal with varying boundaries and names. Some neighborhoods may overlap and be referred to by different names by community members.

To clarify neighborhood boundaries for the purposes of data reporting and monitoring, we have selected four different neighborhood geographies.

Our interactive map, Seattle's Neighborhoods Portal, has reports and tables for each neighborhood.

Urban Centers and Villages

Urban Centers and Villages are areas designated in Seattle's Comprehensive Plan to accommodate future population and job growth. These areas were adopted as part of the 1994 Comprehensive Plan to help guide land use and transportation policies.

Community Reporting Areas

Community Reporting Areas (CRAs) were established in 2004 as a standard, consistent, citywide geography for the purposes of reporting census related information. There are 53 CRAs composed of from one to six census tracts.

Council Districts

In 2013, Seattle voters passed a measure amending our City's Charter to establish City Council Districts. In 2015, voters will elect seven out of nine City Council members by district.

PUMAs

A PUMA (public use microdata area) is a census area that comprises at least 100,000 people and is the smallest geography for which annual American Community Survey data is available.
